

The Circle Way

If we change the chairs, we can change the world.

Every day most of us encounter needs for healing, for hope, and for helping. Every day, there is need to learn to go better together. In all regions and communities, people are called to heal our lands, our families, our relationships, and those that we work with. Sometimes it is reconciliation. Sometimes it is evolution. It's big work and work that needs to be done well.

The Circle Way provides a foundation, a tool beneath all tools, for collaboration and conversation, for thoughtful speaking and attentive listening. It is a way to tap our greatest strengths, individually and together. It is essential container to take on so much of what is escalating – the need for innovation, and the grief of letting go.

This training and retreat is for all involved in deliberate dialogue to further their work and to build communities: tribal leaders, council members, community organizers, government liaisons, educators, healthcare coordinators, program managers, and all others committed to community healing and transformation. Join us to:

- ▶ Grow personal capacity for clarity
- ▶ Develop strength to work as teams
- ▶ Gain ability to get beyond “nice” conversations
- ▶ Remember deep listening from indigenous teachings

Practicum Hosts, Amanda Fenton and

Tenneson Woolf are deeply committed to spreading the introduction, application, and evolution of circle work more widely in the world. They have taught internationally and locally. Their lineage in teaching includes pioneers Christina Baldwin and Ann Linnea. They are delighted to partner for the second year locally with White Raven Consulting's Kelly Poirier and Dawn Foxcroft to offer this practicum of The Circle Way in unceded ʔaʔuukwiiʔath territories – Tofino, Vancouver Island.

This geography and region beckons all of us to the edge, to boldness, and to beauty. To the edge of the North American continent. To the edge of ourselves. And to the edge of human beings working well together.
